

netPolarity Launches a VMS Technology Platform

Enterprise Service Procurement Application Enables Companies to have Complete Visibility and Oversight of all Service Capital Engagements

San Jose, Calif., September 15, 2007—netPolarity, a leader in global workforce procurement solutions, today launched a new vendor management system (VMS), platform supporting client companies with an automated and easy-to-use tracking system that provides intelligence into the entire hiring process lifecycle.

Building on netPolarity's extensive experience in using technology to automate workforce procurement, this web-based VMS application contains end-to-end workflow support from initial job order creation to contingent worker engagement administration. During the workflow lifecycle, the system will manage the routing of job requisitions for approval, the distribution of job requisitions to appropriate staffing vendors, the submission of candidate resumes, and the interview scheduling process. Once a candidate is engaged, the VMS application provides a gateway for time sheet entry, milestone tracking and automated invoicing. Users can access this system through a secure web browser from any location around the clock.

“Most companies already have e-procurement systems in place that let them track the tangible materials and supplies they purchase, yet half of all company expenditures are actually spent on non-tangible services,” said Haixia Zhang, CEO of netPolarity. “This VMS application extends that oversight to workforce procurement and engagement management, providing companies with centralized control over all spending on their staffing needs.”

netPolarity's VMS technology can be deployed quickly, without extensive time and costly software implementation. netPolarity takes on the management, establishing the project methodology, providing project management resources and continuing with full service support to ensure all engagements for service run smoothly.
